Directory of Community Venues
Foreword

It gives me great pleasure to write the foreword for this publication highlighting the many community venues located across rural Northern Ireland. These venues are very tangible signs of the huge confidence shown by the local community and funders to the sustainability of rural communities.

For many people living in rural areas, the local community hall is one of the key assets which binds residents together. It offers local people a key focal point in which to meet, socialise, recreate, educate, worship, celebrate and sympathise. In an era where community cohesion in rural areas is constantly under threat from governmental policies of service centralisation and cutbacks, the community responsibility to ensuring that their venue is at the hub of community life is never more needed. One small way that the venue is sustainable into the future is to encourage its usage by as many groups as possible in the locality and further afield.

This publication allows local groups an outlet to advertise their venue and the range of facilities that they offer. Our responsibility as members of rural communities, rural community groups and agencies that have a commitment to the sustainability of rural areas is quite simple - use these venues when they are relevant and appropriate to our needs. In doing so, we as members of the wider rural family can send a clear signal to those who feel that rural is no longer sustainable and that we should all move into the town and city settlement environment - rural is alive and well!

In congratulating the contributors to this publication for their achievements, the continued availability of your venues for present and future generations will be a fitting tribute to the tenacity and pride of place of rural communities. This tenacity and pride should never be underestimated and policy makers seeking the demise of our rural way of life would do well to ignore at their peril.
